

PSY 245 : Introduction to Addiction Studies

This course provides an in-depth perspective of the effects of psychological and physiological dependency on health, families and communities based on a bio-psycho-social perspective. Students will develop an understanding of the addictive and recovery process, including the reciprocal interaction between individuals and the various social, economic and political systems of which they are a part.

Credits 4

Proficiency

WI

Semester Offered

Offered spring